TRUMP UNLIKELY TO WIN CONGRESS WALL SUPPORT

I President Trump is unlikely to win congressional support for funds he wants for a proposed U.S.-Mexico border wall before an Oct. 1 deadline, meaning he may have to choose between backing down on a key campaign promise or shutting down the government. The second option was a politically dangerous one before Hurricane Harvey tore through Texas over the weekend and it now looks even riskier. At a campaign-style rally in Phoenix last week, Trump doubled down on his demands that Congress fund a Mexican border wall in government spending legislation, adding a threat. "If we have to close down our government, we're building that wall," he told supporters. Since then, lawmakers who were already struggling to hammer out a stop-gap federal spending bill before Oct. 1 to avoid a shutdown have had to factor in Trump's threat as well.

ALL OPTIONS ON TABLE AFTER N. KOREA LAUNCH

2 President Donald Trump warned on Tuesday that all options are on the table for the United States to respond to North Korea's firing of a ballistic missile over northern Japan's Hokkaido island into the sea in a new show of force. The missile test further increased tension in east Asia as U.S. and South Korean forces conducted annual military exercises on the Korean peninsula, angering Pyongyang, which sees the war games as a preparation for invasion. North Korea has conducted dozens of ballistic missile tests under its leader, Kim Jong Un, in defiance of U.N. sanctions, but firing projectiles over mainland Japan is rare. Trump, who has vowed not to let North Korea develop nuclear missiles that can hit the mainland United States, said the world had received North Korea's latest message "loud and clear."

RAIN RECORD

3 Rescue workers and volunteers help residents make their way out of a flooded neighborhood after it was inundated with rainwater following Hurricane Harvey on Tuesday in Houston, Texas. Harvey, which made landfall north of Corpus Christi on Aug. 25, has dumped nearly 50 inches of rain in and around areas of Houston. GETTY IMAGE

IRAN REJECTS US DEMAND FOR UN VISIT TO SITES

4 Iran has dismissed a U.S. demand for United Nations nuclear inspectors to visit its military bases as "merely a dream." It also said the International Atomic Energy Agency was unlikely to agree anyway. The U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Nikki Haley, last week pressed the IAEA to seek access to Iranian military bases to ensure that they were not concealing activities banned by the 2015 nuclear deal reached between Iran and six major powers. U.S. President Donald Trump has called the nuclear pact — negotiated under his predecessor Barack Obama — "the worst deal ever." In April, he ordered a review of whether a suspension of nuclear sanctions on Iran was in the U.S. interest. Iranian government spokesman Mohammad Baqer Nobakht responded at a weekly news conference broadcast on state television on Tuesday.

CONFEDERATE BATTLE FLAG SALES BOOM

5 Demand for Confederate flags at Chris Ackerman's Civil War memorabilia shop in Pennsylvania has surged since violence at a white nationalist rally in Virginia this month reignited the United States' debate over race and the legacy of slavery. The trend has been similar for other sellers of the Confederate battle flag, retailers report. But now that most major U.S. flag makers no longer produce it, given the controversy over the banner, much of the new demand is filled by imports from China and other countries. "We need to get more flags," Ackerman recalled saying following the first order after the Aug. 12 rally in Charlottesville, Virginia. His Gettysburg Regimental Quartermaster store, near a historic Civil War battlefield, and website sells $400 handmade flags to re-enactors and $40 ones shipped from China.

Trump surveys 'epic' damage as Harvey's rains lash Texas

Some 3,500 people have been rescued, with police, firefighters and National Guard troops continuing to locate those marooned in high waters.

President Donald Trump arrived in Texas on Tuesday to survey the damage of Tropical Storm Harvey, the biggest natural disaster of his tenure, as record-setting rainfall lashed Houston and tens of thousands of people fled flooded homes.

The slow-moving storm has brought catastrophic flooding to Texas, killing at least 11 people and paralyzing Houston, the fourth most-populous U.S. city. City officials were preparing to shelter up to 19,000 people, with thousands more expected to flee the area as the flooding entered its fourth day.

A wide swath of Houston and its surrounding suburbs were under water and forecasters warned the rain would continue through Thursday, stressing the dams and drainage systems that protect the low-lying U.S. energy hub.

Officials in Harris County, where Houston is located, warned residents to evacuate as they released water from overflowing reservoirs to alleviate pressure on two dams, which would add to flooding along the Buffalo Bayou waterway that runs through the area.

Trump, speaking in Corpus Christi near where Harvey first came ashore last week as the most powerful hurricane to strike Texas in more than 50 years, said he wanted the relief effort to stand as an example of how to respond to a storm.

"We want to do it better than ever before," he said.

Trump later spoke to a crowd of people affected by the storm.

"This storm, it's epic what happened. But you know what, it happened in Texas, and Texas can handle anything," Trump said, before waving a Texas state flag over the crowd, standing on a step-ladder near a fire truck.

Harvey has drawn comparisons with Hurricane Katrina, which devastated New Orleans 12 years ago, killing 1,800 people. Former President George W. Bush was widely criticized for his administration's handling of the response to that disaster, taking a heavy toll on public support of his administration.

Trump was aiming to avoid a similar reaction.

An 11th death was reported on Tuesday — Houston Police Sgt. Steve Perez, 60, a 34-year veteran of the force whose body was found after apparently drowning while attempting to get to work on Sunday, Police Chief Art Acevedo told reporters.

Acevedo said Perez's family had urged him not to leave the house because of the dangerous flooding but the officer told them, "We have work to do."

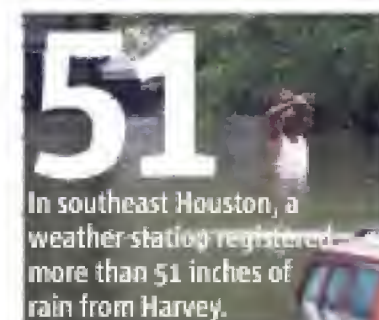

Large numbers of civilians also formed ad hoc rescue groups.

Gloria Stilwell, 44, who described herself as a stay-at-home mom, said she agreed with Trump's assessment that Houstonians were well equipped to handle the storm.

"I totally agree with him. Texas can definitely handle it," Stilwell said. "I've lived here since 1980, through plenty of hurricanes. Texans have always banded together."

Nurse Lisa Ike, 39, was less impressed.

"Texas can handle anything? I just lost my house and three cars. We need help," Ike said, after seeing Trump's comments.

She said she did not vote in the election and said she had not yet made up her mind about Trump, adding, "My opinion will be made by how he handles this situation."

The storm broke rainfall records for the continental United States, with one site near Houston recording 51 inches of precipitation since the storm's start.

Multiple looters were arrested overnight, police said.

Harvey has roiled energy markets and wrought damage estimated to be in the billions of dollars, with rebuilding likely to last beyond Trump's four-year term in office.

The Gulf of Mexico is home to half of U.S. refining capacity. The reduction in supply led gasoline futures to hit their highest level in two years this week as Harvey knocked out about 16 percent of total U.S. refining capacity, based on company reports and Reuters estimates.

Avoid scammers posing as local Powerball winner, police say

Fake social media accounts for Mavis Wanczyk, last week's Powerball winner, are popping up and asking for people's information.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

After a Chicopee resident won the Powerball jackpot last week, local police are warning residents that scammers are creating social media accounts in the winner's name.

Mavis Wanczyk, 53, won the second largest jackpot in the lottery's history last week, a $758.7 million prize.

Now, fake accounts offering money are being made in Wanczyk's name.

Chicopee police said in a Facebook post that the department is "well aware of many fake accounts being created on Twitter, Facebook and Instagram stating that they are Mavis Wanczyk and that following and answering private messages will result in you getting money."

Police are asking people to report such accounts as fake on those social media platforms.

"PLEASE do not fall for these scams," the department added. "DO NOT give out any personal information to these accounts. Do not fall victim to a scammer by releasing ANY of your information."

One such Twitter account with the handle @MavisWanczyk758 said in a tweet on Monday, "I will be giving away a special gift to my first 100K followers! All you have to do is RT & follow this account & reply with Cash App ID :) That account has only four tweets and was created this month.

An Instagram account with the name "maviswanczykball" has only one post that shows a picture of Wanczyk with her Powerball check. The caption reads, "I will be giving away a [shout out] and a very special gift to my first 50,000 followers!!" The same post appears on an account named "maviswanczyk757" and is also that account's only post.

Wanczyk said at a news conference last week that she came forward only in hopes of getting the attention frenzy "over and done with" so that she could be left alone. She has not said if she plans to give away any money.

The former hospital worker seemed a bit overwhelmed at the focus on her after her win. When asked what she was going to do on the day the win was announced in order to celebrate, she said, "I'm going to go hide in my bed."

Netflix paired some of its shows with corresponding pot varieties. GETTY IMAGES

Netflix sells pot customized to 12 of its biggest shows

This weekend, "Netflix and chill" went literal: The streaming giant sold marijuana customized for watching their shows.

The Netflix Collection was announced last weekend and is sold in a pop-up shop in West Hollywood, California, in collaboration with Alternative Herbal Health Services. It's a promo for the new show "Disjointed," which stars Kathy Bates as a woman who opens her own pot dispensary.

Variety reported on Netflix's promo: "Each strain was cultivated with the specific shows in mind, designed to complement each title based on their tone. For example, sillier shows may be more indica dominant, while dramedies will be more sativa dominant to help the more powerful scenes resonate." Some of the shows referenced include "Bojack Horseman," "Chelsea" and "Mystery Science Theater 3000."

Netflix said it is not profiting from the sales.

The dispensary sold 27 pounds of Netflix pot over the weekend, Adweek reported. MICHAEL MARTIN

Paris Jackson's tribute

Tuesday, Aug. 29, would have been Michael Jackson's 59th birthday. And so his um, daughter, Paris — Paris-Michael Katherine Jackson, if ya nasty — wrote a tribute to her late um, dad, on Instagram.

"Birthday wishes to the love of my life, the one person who showed me what passion truly was, the one that gave me solid morals to live by and how to dream," she wrote.

She also shared a picture of herself from Sunday's VMA awards — where she gave a rousing political speech condemning white supremacy — with some sort of weird shadow of Michael kissing her forehead. I don't know. Kids these days and their-mega advanced photo-manipulation skills, I tell ya.

So yeah, in case you've been wondering what Paris Jackson has been up to: same old. Thank goodness for her consistency, honestly.

It's all very nice.

Corinne Olympios opens up

Corinne Olympios — of "Bachelor in Paradise" fame — is finally opening up about the scandal that rocked the reality-television world earlier this summer. And she says, she doesn't blame DeMario Jackson, at all.

The 24-year-old appeared on "Good Morning America" to set the record straight. And apparently, a reaction to drugs and alcohol was to blame. "It was like I went under anesthesia," Olympios said in the interview. Apparently, the medication she was on impairs judgement and balance, can cause blackouts and isn't supposed to be mixed with alcohol — which Olympios says she didn't know.

"It's like I'm watching ... not me, I'm watching someone else," she said about watching the footage of her and DeMario's hook up.

"I'm really happy this is coming to an end," she said.

Me too, girl. I'm happy that you're happy.

The "Bachelor in Paradise" scandal continues.

George Clooney tries relatable

Did you know? George Clooney is just a regular, relatable dad! And he would like to take this time to prove it to you!

In an interview with the Associated Press, he talks about his daddy duties because guys! He's just your standard dude slash dad — he's just like the rest of us! "I just have to clean the barf off my tux," the 56-year-old said. "It used to be my barf, but now it's the twins' barf. So it all works out." Ha ha! Goodness Clooney, you are just so clever!

In case you were wondering about the women who carried a set of twins around in her uterus and then delivered them, well, Clooney is willing to give Amal credit where credit is due — but just for a second, because let's make sure we're paying attention to him for the most part, OK? "She's like an Olympic athlete. She's doing so beautifully." So kind of you to notice, Clooney!

That goatee is unfortunate, by the way.

Mhm, of course.

Sure: Nick still loves Vanessa

Last week, "Bachelor" alums Nick Viall and Vanessa Grimaldi confirmed they were ending their relationship a mere five months after their televised engagement. Now, each of them is opening up about it the only way they know how — via Instagram and or interviews with gossip rags!

Grimaldi posted an emo picture of her leaning on some rando's shoulder and wrote, "It's OK to feel broken. It's OK to cry. It's OK to lean on a friend. In the end, it will always be OK." Sure!

Viall, for his part, admits he still loves Vanessa a ton. "I'm not afraid to say that. I like to try new things, get out of my comfort zone. I know I have a lot of work to do in that arena."

Something to note, though: His relationship with Grimaldi was his fourth attempt to find love through the "Bachelor" franchise.

Hey dude, maybe reality TV induced love just isn't for you. It's not for most people, to be honest.

Seann William Scott is 'all about the blood'

Actor was originally "hesitant" about returning for "Goon: Last of the Enforcers."

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroNewYork
gregorywakeman@metro.us

Seann William Scott doesn't need to be reminded that 2011's "Goon" was the best-reviewed film of his career. It's something that he has noticed himself, and is exactly the reason he was originally wary of returning for the sequel, "Goon: Last of the Enforcers."

It was only the addition of Jay Baruchel as director and the debut feature-filmmaker's vision for the comedy that persuaded Seann William Scott to comeback. With "Goon: The Last Enforcer" the duo didn't want to just rehash the original, though, so they decided to go bigger, broader and much, much bloodier. The latter was something that Seann William Scott especially pushed for; he's "all about the blood."

"I just thought when we were shooting the fighting stuff, 'Let's go big. More blood.' I was just all about the blood. Some people might think that it is ridiculous, but I don't give a f—k. Make it gnarly; people are either going to love it or hate it. We went for it," the 40-year-old said. But it wasn't all plain-sailing, as Scott recalled how one of the film's producers was more than a little perturbed by the amount of blood on-screen.

"When we were shooting it, somebody from above was concerned about blood. They were like, 'If there's too much blood then the movie won't sell in Germany.' I was like, 'F—k that.' I told Jay, 'We're not going to give them the option of a scene without blood, so they won't have the option in the editing room to cut around it.' Jay was all for it, too. It might have become a little Kill Bill-ish, and Tarantinoish, but I don't care."

Scott's insistence that "Goon: Last of the Enforcers" was bloodier than its predecessor was a direct response to Goon's final fight sequence. The bar set was exactly the reason Scott was so hesitant to return, especially because he couldn't imagine why a second film was necessary.

"I actually thought the first movie was a perfect one-off, and, for me, I think it was the only movie I have ever done that got good reviews. Like, actually great reviews. So I was a little bit hesitant to do anything that would ruin everyone's love for the first one," Scott explained. It was the script's "heart," humor and arc of Doug "The Thug" Glatt that quickly changed the actor's mind. Especially because it explored the "end of their careers," and the characters "having to face a future where they're not going to be doing this anymore. They have to deal with not being cheered at, having to get real jobs. Because that's what athletes and artists have to deal with."

You can see exactly how "Goon: Last of the Enforcers" tackles this terrain — and decide whether or not Scott was actually right to return — when the comedy is released into cinemas on Sept. 1.

'American Idol' auditions are coming to town

Do you have what it takes to be a singing superstar?

MATT JULI

It didn't take long for "American Idol" to find its way back to airwaves, and now the singing-competition series is hitting the road in search of music's next big star.

ABC recently announced open auditions for the rebooted reality show, which will stop in dozens of cities through September. "American Idol" is expected to make its way to Boston on Sept. 8.

Hopefuls who want to sing their hearts out for the show's producers have two ways of trying out. The first is through an online au-

The second way to audition is via the in-person open call. All applicants must be between the ages of 15 and 28 and can register ahead of time online or at the event that day.

Should lucky locals get the chance to make it to the next round, waiting for them behind the judges table will be none other than 2017 MTV VMAs host Katy Perry, who plans to fill the shoes of the infamous Simon Cowell.

Longtime "Idol" host Ryan Seacrest will also be returning for the rebooted series, which is set to debut on ABC in 2018 after running for 15 seasons on Fox.

Alarm clocks to wake up to (instead of your phone)

Banish the blue light from your bedroom and still get to work on time.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metrowest

It's your iPod, your camera and your alarm: These days, everything you need is on your mobile phone. Sure, it's convenient to have it all in one place, but it also makes it difficult to ever fully get off the grid.

When it comes to getting a good night's snooze, studies have shown that exposure to the blue light of the screen can suppress melatonin and alter circadian rhythms, negatively affecting the sleep cycle. Why not get the device off your nightstand, even out of your bedroom entirely? Sub in one of these stylish alarm clocks so you can have a restful, (mostly) tech-free night and still make it to work on time the next morning.

Slab Beech Click Clock, Gingko, $75

Prop this smart wooden timepiece on your nightstand and sleep without any pesky digital light to disturb you. When you need to know the time — or the date or temperature — snap your fingers or tap your nightstand, and subtle green LED lights will display the digits. You won't see them again until the alarm goes off in the morning. Comes with a rechargeable battery.

London Retro Alarm Clock, Uncommon Goods, $30

Wow, remember telling time on an actual face clock? Wake up old-school style with this retro twin-bell alarm clock in schoolhouse red. When it sounds off, it's loud enough to rouse you. Requires one AA battery.

Philips Wake Up Light, Amazon, $79.99

This light-therapy lamp will help ease you out of bed with nature sounds (or FM radio) and changing colors to simulate the sunrise. Pre-bed, try the sunset feature, which will dim the lights little by little as you fall asleep.

ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Clocky Run Away Alarm Clock, Nanda, $39.99

If you want to get a literal running start to your day, try this "Shark Tank" sensation. If you snooze, this clock on wheels will leap off your nightstand and run away beeping, forcing you to hop out of bed to silence it. Available in flashy hues from chrome to gold to raspberry, it also brightens up your home decor.

Moonbeam Alarm Clock, L.L. Bean, $59.95

FANTASY FOOTBALL ADVICE AS THE SEASON DRAWS NEAR

A glance at who to nab and who to steer clear of in your fantasy draft.

Hyde will rule the 49ers' backfield

Early in the preseason there was talk of Carlos Hyde having to work for the starting job in San Francisco, but now three weeks into the preseason it appears that is not the case. Hyde has been very effective with his pre-season touches while his fellow running backs have struggled with any action they've seen. Tim Hightower already has a fumble on his preseason resume and rookie fourth-round pick Joe Williams has disappointed after a strong Week 1. Hyde has feature-back potential, as there isn't really anyone to take touches away in the passing game. While he did miss three games last season, when he was on the field Hyde was extremely effective—he posted a career-high 4.6 yards per carry and ranked in the top 10 in yards after the catch. Hyde is currently the 17th running back off the board, which means he could be a great value pick in the third/fourth round.

Parker will benefit from gun-slinging Cutler

While Jarvis Landry is still the wide receiver of note in Miami, third-year wideout DeVante Parker has been making the most noise in the preseason. The 6-foot-3 jump ball specialist is the ideal target for the free-sliding Jay Cutler, who is never afraid to launch up a 50-50 ball and rely on his receiver to make a play. Cutler has heaped praise on

BILL DUBIEL

Bill Dubiel is a fantasy football expert and lead NFL columnist for Rotoballer.com.

Parker, calling him a "faster Alshon (Jeffery)," the similarly shaped Pro Bowl receiver who Cutler peppered with targets in Chicago. Parker finally began to show flashes of his sky-high potential last year, making several big plays especially in the red zone. It's perfectly reasonable to believe that Parker will emerge as the top dog in Miami this year, which would make him a steal at his current ADP (WR33, 69 overall).

Price way too high for Gordon

Melvin Gordon had an outstanding year from a fantasy standpoint in 2016, and his current ADP reflects a wide-

Chargers running back Melvin Gordon is a little too costly this season. GETTY IMAGES

Sleepers

Doug Martin, RB, TB — Martin would likely be going off the board as a top 30 RB if not for the three-game suspension he is dealing with to start the season. Given the role he'll have in a very good Tampa Bay offense when he returns, he is worth snagging in the seventh or eighth round.

Zay Jones, WR, BUF — The second-round rookie is suddenly the top option in the Buffalo passing game with Sammy Watkins now in LA and Jordan Matthews ailing. He will stretch the field and work in the red zone, and carries more than enough upside to justify taking a flier in the late rounds.

Jason Witten, TE, DAL — The seasoned veteran is still the main safety blanked for Dak Prescott in Dallas and his role should be locked-in. Witten offers a reliable floor and will mix in some big games throughout the course of the season.

spread belief that he will repeat last year's success. With Danny Woodhead out of the picture, Gordon will be the feature back once again for the Chargers, but he is a prime candidate for regression in 2017. Gordon managed a very pedestrian 3.9 yards per carry last season on 254 attempts, and ranked in the middle/low end of the pack in elusiveness and yards after contact. Much of his fantasy value was predicated on rushing touchdowns (10), and all 10 came within 29 red zone carries—it will be nearly impossible for him to repeat that efficiency. He also received more action in the passing game than he should have once Woodhead, Keenan Allen and Branden Oliver went down with injuries. With all of these factors working against him, there is no chance Gordon returns top-10 overall value in 2017, making him an easy avoid on draft day.
